Past News - it was a busy spring / summer

A full spring started with the honor of being a featured artist in the Spring issue of the lovely magazine Stone Voices, a magazine devoted to art, spirituality, mindfulness and creativity.

I was also accepted to the New City Galleries' show, Likeness: Portraits of Vermonters, which opened April 4th and lasted through May 24th. Three of my miniature portraits were included. These are portraits of women using the scoring technique I have been developing using walnut ink and watercolor paper and are showcased on larger mixed media panels.

If you have the chance to checkout this gallery on 132 Church St., Burlington, VT, it's worth the trip. There is always something there that is thought provoking and riding the edge. They also are a concert venue featuring folk music.

in the text of old pages, what is discovered is the heartbeat of lost thought, poems give new life to the forgotten word...

For the month of May Zone Three, in Middlebury, VT, featured my Discovered Poems. The discovered poems arise from pages of text, words are spotlighted to create a new meaning out of a prior existence. I also incorporate layering techniques and mixed-media methods to further develop the poems into artistic statements.

Zone Three also sponsored a poetry reading where I read from my discovered poems series along with other recent poems. It was a lovely night with many in attendance. Thank you, Rachel.

And there is still time to check out the show State of Beings at Studio Place Arts in Barre, Vermont. The show runs through August 30th. I was honored to have three pieces accepted for this dynamic, multi-media show inspired by humans and human-like beings.

If you would like to stop by the studio please contact me, I welcome visitors.
