

I am thrilled to announce that Stone Voices, a magazine devoted to art, spirituality, mindfulness and creativity, has featured me in their spring edition. The feature includes a short essay on my work and seventeen images. The magazine itself is quite lovely, the images are high quality and the articles quite interesting and thought provoking. Take a look here at their preview webpage:

The editor of Stone Voices invited me to be a featured artist when they were introduced to my work through Still Point Art Gallery, an online gallery that is associated with Stone Voices, which has accepted my work into two shows over the past year.

In February of 2013 I opened my studio at 6 South St. in Bristol, VT. In the last year, along with creating art there (which has been fabulous,) I have been developing a way of working with art as a technique for self-discovery and growth that I call Art and the Practice of Presence. I love holding the space for people to step into all that comes up in the moments of creation. And being witness to the self-discovery which arises in those moments. I offer sessions in this technique and if you are interested in learning more go to: www.vanvlietarts.com/art-and-the-practice-of-presence.html, or call me.

“We are all deep wells of experience. How can we draw up what is there in any given moment, express what is wanting to be expressed? This takes practice, the practice of presence, of mindfulness, of listening inward. And the daring to reveal what we find.”

Recent activity in the studio: I've been creating art pieces of discovered poems. I'm taking old books and breathing poems into them and then highlighting the poems in several ways. This one here reads like this: Art speaks paintings and songs, a sense of awe, awakened to feel awe suppose reverence, finding the power to walk in the shadow of trees. To see more come to my upcoming show at Rachel Baird's Zone Three Gallery this May. There will be a reading and gallery showing of these new pieces.
